

Job Posting Site List

Job posting sites are not only useful for finding positions when you are in an active job search. They can also be extremely helpful for:

- discovering potential areas of interest and related positions (i.e., window shopping the possibilities!),
- learning about job descriptions and terms of art for various types of work,
- finding employers who are hiring and which areas/positions are in high demand, AND
- yes, they are also very helpful for finding perfect positions when you're ready to get hired.

The list below provides posting sites for the most common careers and vocations that Candler students and graduates explore, including:

1. General Job Posting Sites
2. Denominational Ministry
3. Non-Denominational Ministry
4. Youth and Campus Ministry
5. Chaplaincy and CPE
6. Non-profit and Social Entrepreneurship

When in an active job search, remember to be patient, to check your chosen posting sites regularly (we recommend 3-6 sites) throughout the week (2-3 times), and to set alerts when possible.

Happy hunting!

1. General Job Posting Sites and Aggregators

- Handshake is Emory University's main posting database, and it is free to Candler students! It has thousands of jobs available that you can filter and search. You can also see what has been posted for Candler students and alumni, including on campus jobs, internships, and post-graduate positions, by doing a quick keyword search for "Candler."
- Indeed.com is the one general job search site not included in Google for Jobs. It is the best general job search site aggregator for most purposes.
- After Indeed, the two best general job search aggregators are Simplyhired and Glassdoor. You can also try Careerbuilder and Monster.
- Google for Jobs is not a job posting site, but it indexes virtually all the major job boards, except for Indeed. A great feature is that you can sort job search results by title (various titles for the position), city, date posted, type (i.e., full-time, part-time, etc.), company type (e.g., law firm or company's industry), and employer.
- Emory's Job Board lists full and part-time positions available at Emory (for the general public, not for student workers).
- LinkedIn Jobs is a top job search site. If you have a LinkedIn profile, look at the "Jobs you may be interested in" section just below the search box before you search the site. Below "Jobs you may be interested in" is a "Companies in your network" section that shows job listings with organizations at which you also have LinkedIn connections. If you click on a company, it will take you to the home or careers page on LinkedIn with the job listings.
- ZipRecruiter gives access to millions of job postings across the US and internationally.
- LinkUp provides verified, up-to-date job listings directly from employer websites.
- Check out the websites of other seminaries, particularly of those in the geographical area in which you are planning to live. Often these seminaries will have job postings of their own and you may be able to find leads using them.
